“ I am dreading today. I know that death is a natural part of life but the hole I feel in my heart is huge.

The Monday before my grandma passed she looked me dead in the face and told me she loved me. (I lost it but needed that) We held hands, she told me how proud of me she was for going after what I wanted and that I was going to be a very good lawyer.

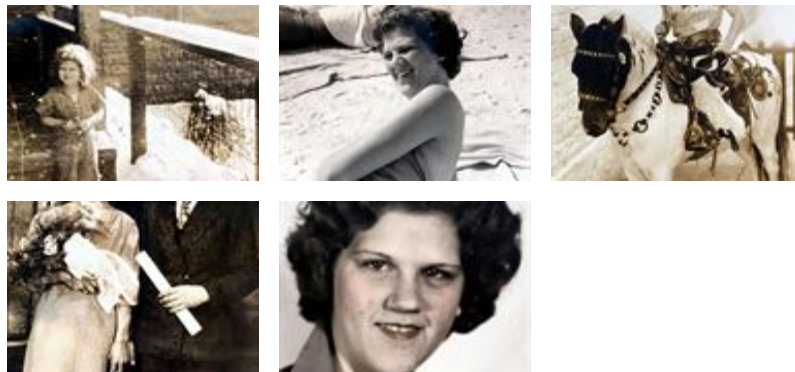

She bought me my very first suitcase. That thing has gone all over the world with me. I got it when I was 17 years old. She knew I had this wild desire to travel and explore. She always supported me no matter the struggle I was going through. She was at every major event in my life and I can't imagine her not being at anymore.

She was the rock that brought my family together 💜

“ I never missed a chance to tell people how strong you were. You were one of the strongest people I know. Not only with your fight against cancer but in everyday life. You were the glue that held your family together. Thank you for always being there for me, Ashley and Brian. You will be greatly missed. We love you.
