“ When I think of my childhood, I think of Florida.

I think of going to my Tía Sandra's house the place where everything happened. That was the house. The house where we gathered for Christmas, summer breaks, Thanksgiving, New Year's Eve... anything and everything. No matter what, we always came together there.

Some of the best memories of my life were created within those walls, because of her.

She was so caring, so understanding, and so giving. The kind of person who would offer you her last just to see you smile. She talked to my mom and her sisters every single day, all day and it reminds me so much of the bond I have with my own sisters now.

Life isn't fair. It's hard to understand why so many in our family have gone to heaven recently. But I hold on to the hope that they are truly resting, finally at peace watching over us, protecting us.

Tía, I celebrate your life.

The joy you brought to so many... the joy you brought to me and to my children.

Because of you, I believe that true love is real. That even through ups and downs, family is worth fighting for. You showed me the importance of unity, of gathering, and of holding on to every single memory—every picture—because one day, that's what we'll have to hold close.

I love you. Always. ❤️
